Teaching License Policy, Sindh - 2023

Background

The quality of education depends to a great extent on the quality of teaching. Effective teaching has a significant positive impact on student learning outcomes, which in turn improves the social and economic health of a country. The education policies in Pakistan also recognize the importance of good teacher, however, getting serious legislation to ensure that effective teaching and learning takes place in classrooms has remained a challenge. As a result, the performance of students, as indicated by national and international assessments systems, like National Education Assessment System (NEAS), Sindh Standardised Achievement Test (SAT), Annual Status of Education Report (ASER), Trends in International Mathematics and Science Study (TIMSS), remains below par.

One of the ways of raising teacher quality and thereby improving teaching in classrooms is through the effective system of teaching licensure. This has the potential to enhance the professionalism of teachers by creating a minimum benchmark for hiring teachers which in turn will make teaching a more attractive profession. Teaching licenses are quite common in several countries across the globe and have ensured that professionally qualified and committed teachers join the teaching profession. The teaching license in a country would help to ensure that teachers entering into the profession have met the required professional standards. As the Government of Sindh has been continuously trying to improve the quality of teachers, it has engaged academics, private, non-governmental organisations and other stakeholders for introducing teaching license in Sindh to improve the quality of teachers. This policy is the result of the ongoing efforts to improve teaching quality. The teaching license policy will help teachers in enhancing their career and status.

Process of Policy Development

The Teaching license policy is the result of research and consultations with a variety of stakeholders, inside and outside the country. The process included a review of previous policy efforts, drafting of an initial version with stakeholders, discussions and debates at various forums, policy dialogues and eventual agreement. The White Paper, produced by the Aga Khan University – Institute for Educational Development (AKU-IED) in June 2022 and jointly launched with Durbeen and Sindh Teacher Education Development Authority (STEDA), provided significant background work leading to this policy. The White Paper itself emerged from an extended four-stage process. The first stage was situational analysis in which a thorough national and international literature review was conducted. The second stage resulted in Green Papers. The third stage involved key stakeholders in policy dialogues. The final paper incorporated this extensive and consultative review.
